Your library account

Your library membership—the account associated with your library card—is what allows you to perform activities at your library's Web site, such as reserving a book, joining a waiting list, searching databases or pulling up the electronic full text of a magazine article.

Search results and item details often link into these online services at your local library. But only your library membership will give you full access to them. If you do not have a membership at your local library, aren't sure whether you have already created an account on the library's website, or have forgotten the user name or password associated with your account, talk with a staff member at your local library to review the status of your library membership.
